Positive and Negative. I believe it is based on the person. Like me. I text a lot, but it doesn't change how I talk in person. But I do feel that shy people can text with no problem and remain happy.

Posted 10 seconds ago. Like * Comment * See Friendship

Rachel Widziszewski

Negative because of the digital bullying and harrassment. People are so used to immediate responses and that makes for an impatient generation.

Posted 2 minutes ago. Like * Comment * See Friendship

Cody Schappacher

Negative because people are becoming so obsessed with this digital communication that they are forgetting how to talk to people and it ends up controlling them.

Posted 7 minutes ago. Like * Comment * See Friendship

Kevin Asplan

Positive because people in general are meant to communicate with each other, and the new digital revolution will only improve that basic instinct.

Posted 13 minutes ago. Like * Comment * See Friendship

Zach Myers

Positive because it makes communication easier.

Posted 24 minutes ago. Like * Comment * See Friendship

Jordan Marburger

Positive because it makes it a lot easier for everyone to talk to each other and stay connected.

Posted 31 minutes ago. Like * Comment * See Friendship

Brooke Wells

Negative because we will get so used to talking over text or the internet that we won't have good communication skills in person.

Posted 2 hours ago. Like * Comment * See Friendship

Matt Kreke

Negative because people don't communicate as well as they used to and they are becoming more shy.

SOCIAL NETWORKS

are you connected? *

Mark Zuckerberg created Facebook as a lark in 2004 while he was at Harvard and billed it as "an online directory that connects people through social networks at colleges." Since then, its growth has been tremendous. In its December 27, 2010 issue, Time magazine reported that one out of every dozen people on the planet has a Facebook account, and that if Facebook were a country, it would be the third behind China and India (the U.S. would come in fourth.) According to Google, Facebook is the most visited website in the world.

Facebook and other digital social media have become part of the social fabric of our lives and have changed the way we relate to one another. Many experts agree that we are just in the infancy stage of this new social media age. Because of its obvious importance in the lives of Badin students, the yearbook staff has chosen Rambook as our theme this year. After all, before the dawn of digital social media, yearbooks were the original social networks.

While powerful new technologies provide great benefits, they also change the way we live, and not in ways everyone likes. Yearbook staffers asked Badin students and teachers to comment on social networks and other digital media. Here are the results!

Do you
YouTube

38% of Badin students have posted a video on Youtube.

46% are in a video on Youtube.

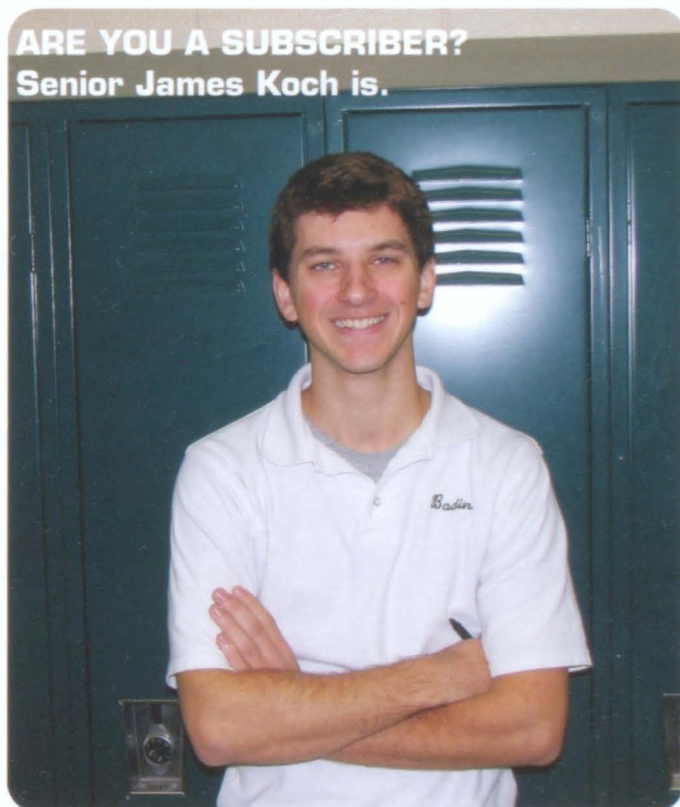

93% know someone in a video on Youtube.

the average youtube user spends between 15-25 minutes a day on the site.

James Koch has 66 videos posted on YouTube. Given James' interest in all things mechanical, his videos are, not surprisingly, about antique engines - demonstrations and explanations. And he is not the only antique engine enthusiast; his videos have garnered a total of 628,151 hits, with the highest video at 221,837, enough to earn James a nice income on the side.

Koch, a National Merit Scholar, is headed to the University of Alabama on a full scholarship to major in mechanical engineering.

Nov 18, 2010: President Britney McGraw and Student Council organized a fundraiser for the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society. Badin seniors participated with two teams. TECH UPDATE

TECHNOLOGY in 2010-2011

New:

iPod Touch @ Badin

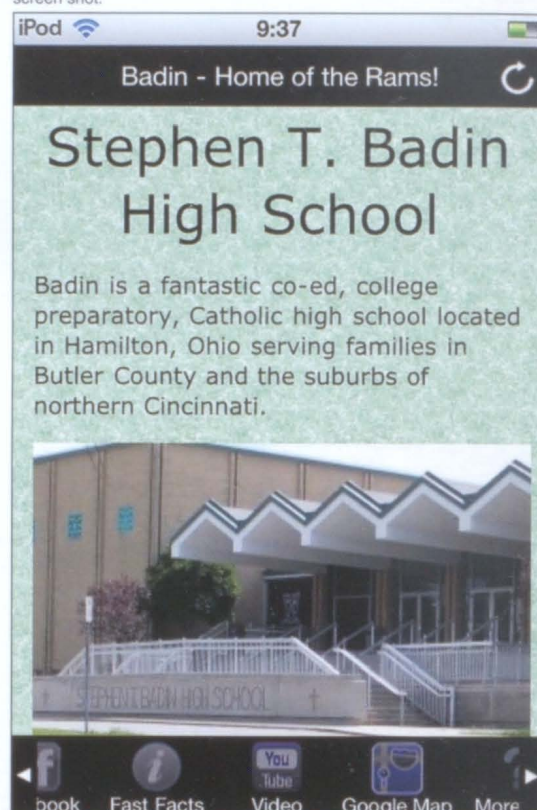

Above, freshmen Megan Gonya and Katie Harcum complete an assignment in science class using their i-touches. Starting with the class of 2014, Badin began providing all freshmen with iPod Touches. These hand-held devices are used by teachers and students alike to enhance their learning. The iPods allow students to download applications, more commonly known as "apps," that can be utilized by the students. From a portable Bible app to an app that allows students to make virtual flashcards, Badin students are utilizing the latest technology to get an edge in today's increasingly tech-oriented world.

HAND HELD DEVICES:

Fad OR Future?

Many people still call these gadgets pictured to the left "phones," but the more accurate term for the newest mobile technology being released is "device."

These devices can do a whole lot more than just make calls. Smartphones have had email and internet capabilities for a while now, but developers are pushing the envelope. The creation of hundreds of thousands of apps have led the smart phone revolution, transforming them from ordinary phones to mobile, personal computers.

Apps are made not just for smartphones, but for tablets and even cars. With the ability to do virtually everything a computer does from the palm of your hand, some experts speculate that some day in the near future fully functional computers will be a thing of the past. You will be able to plug your device into something like a computer when you want a keyboard or a larger screen, but the device will be doing all the work. When you're done, you can take everything you've been working on with you in your pocket.

Top 3 Uses of Smartphones (according to a CBS News survey)

Facebook is pretty much the biggest thing to hit the internet in the last 6 years. Facebook was valued at over 50 Billion dollars in early 2011. That's a lot of dough.

creativity sparks in Badin community_

"A Younger Grieg, in Rome" by Mark O'Hara

This morning in the cafe
Liszt told me
aging was like dismissing
the words of a friend you know is a liar:
it is never quite successful.
The old man continued his game
of sneaking saucers
onto the nearby table of an Englishman,
and my opinions could not ease his apprehension at knowing how it was to be poor at a thing
we do unceasingly.
Sometimes, he said,
the feeling lodges in the lungs
like air encased in ice,
that even cracking
wouldn't let escape.
Something of the ache to compose,
which composing fails to cure.

Poetry Slam

"Lifes Web" by Sheyanne Crank

Reality, numbing somberity.
Pain and what's right belong.
Caring.. Why must I?
Thrilling, painful feelings.
For once i'd like to be numb
That I am, all the time i can.
Sparkling beauty,
It doesn't hurt to think or be anymore while in that state,
My saving oasis.
I wish i was allowed to be.. yet,
I just know i can't
Take it all in a fistful of monstrous apathy,
Toss it away.
Like a delicately spun thread of time,
Shinning, catching every light.
Tear it,
Watch it fall apart.
Nothing to the fist as it was to the creator.
Malicious object of distruction,
My continued web spins on.

"Badin" by Sarah Flum

Badin is...
Badin is family, friends and teachers
all tied together in one high school building.
Badin is where students grow in knowledge and learn something new everyday.
Badin is a teachers pair of hands helping students
whether its homework, schedules, or personal issues.
Badin is spirit.
cheering for all the athletes,
praying for a victory!
Badin is late Friday nights
cheering on football and basketball teams.
Badin is where everyone is welcome,
everyone treated equally.
Badin is faith.
Students Receiving Jesus' Body and Blood at All School Masses.
Badin is love.
Badin is exciting.
Badin is Family.
But most of all,
Badin is my home.

Budding artists: On the left, junior Molly Ehrenschwender with fellow junior Haley Fortuno.

"Magic Door" by Rachel Zeinner

Through my magic you'll see
Tropical trees with leaves of green

You would the ocean blue
The creatures would understand you

There would be a warm breeze
As you climb through the trees

Into your tree house you would climb
And then you'd swing from a jungle
vine

Through my magic door

"Shadow" by Molly Ehrenschwender

I came into the light one day
that i might see my shadow.
Darkness upon darkness leaves little
to be illuminated.
And in the bright white, i saw such pure beauty that when my shadow came to focus, i knew just what had to be done.
